WHY PACIFIC MAIL SOLD; BIG PROFITS WAS CAUSE

Washington.—The Pacific Mail Steamship Company refused to give the new seamen's law a fair test, and withdrew from the Pacific trade because it could sell five steamers at a profit of more than $1,000,000.

These charges are made by Secretary of Commerce Redfield in answer to the claim of Pacific Mail officials that they were compelled to sell their vessels and withdraw from the far Eastern trade because of the seamen's law.

The Pacific Mail Company objected particularly to the language clause of the seamen's law, which it held would require the abandonment of Asiatic crews, with a consequent prohibitive cost of wage and food.

Secretary Redfield declares, however, the department had not prepared regulations for the enforcement of the law when the steamers were sold, and the owners of the company did not seek to learn the spirit in which the law would be administered, but acted on an assumed interpretation of the law which had no official sanction.

Moreover, Secretary Redfield said he wrote R. P. Schwerin, general manager of the company, and assured him that the department would not put the construction on the language test that the company had put upon it, and suggested that the company give the law a six months' trial before sacrificing its business.

In announcing his conclusion that the company was not forced out of business but sold out at a profit, Secretary Redfield charged that the Pacific Mail Company was "heavily overcapitalized." The last two years had been the most prosperous in the firm's history, the Secretary declared, and since April its ships have left thousands of tons of freight behind them at ports which they were unable to carry.

"It was from this prosperous business the company withdrew without asking any questions," Secretary Redfield added.

The sale of the five Pacific Mail steamers for $3,750,000, Secretary Redfield said, shows "an apparent profit in excess of a million dollars" over what the normal valuation of the boats would have been at 5 per cent depreciation charges. The fact that the company's stock sold for 18 last March and for 38 in August, after sale of the boats, is held significant.

One Way to Get Water.

Walter F. Reid, the scientist, who invented smokeless powder, has led an adventurous life in many lands. His invention of smokeless powder was a result of his experiences among the red Indians, when he relied on his rifle for food. On one occasion Mr. Reid was dying of thirst in the pampas of the Argentine. In his extremity he noticed his horse during the night licking the dew off the vegetation. Then he had an inspiration. He dragged his shirt over the grass until it was saturated, and then squeezed it out. He worked in this way for hours, and in the morning there was enough water to save the lives of both man and horse.—London Standard.
